Senate Defeats Pullout Proposal By 55-39 Vote

By Spencer Rich

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 (WP).-The Senate in a 55-39 roll call vote today, defeated an amendment requiring total withdrawal of U.S. troops from Vietnam by the end of next year.

The aponsors of the ameodmeot made an impassioned plea at the last momeot for its enactment, arguing that setting a final date was the only way to insure a definite and complete U.S. withdrawal from Indochina after nearly ten years of conflict.

Sen. George S. McGovern, D., S.D., chief Democratic sponsor of the amcodmeot, io an emotional floor speech a few minutes before the vote, told the Senate that "every senator io this chamber is partly responsible for sending 50,000 young Americans to ao early grave. In one sense this chamber reeks of blood. Every aenator here is partly responsible for that human wreckage at Walter Reed and Bethesda Naval [hospitals] and all across our land-young boys without legs or arms or genitals or faces

But the Senate, beeding the arguments of the administration sod Sen. John Stennis, D., Miss., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, that the fixing of a specific pullout date would make it more difficult for the United States to negotiate with the North Vietnamese oo the end to the war and would tie the President's haods, defeated the amendment to end the war by a substantial 16-vote margin. After the vore, sponsors of the amendment said they were highly gratified that they received as many votes as they did. Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R., Ore., the chief Republican sponsor, said that when the amendment was introduced sponsors thought they could count on only 12 votes. "We've come a loog way from a handful of Senators that we had last fall." sald Sen. Charles E. Goodell, R., N.Y.

Sen. McGovern said: "It is remarkable that for the first time in history more than one-third of the U.S. Senate has voted to cut off funds for a war while we are actually still

Sen. McGovern said, however, that it did not appear there was enough time this year to mount any new end-the-war campaigns. "But next year," he said. Sen. Stennis commented that "sometimes we need to rock

Sen, Robert Dole, R., Kan., said that the defeat of the amendment was "a vote of confidence in President Nixon to get us out of the war. It was not a vote for war. It was a vote for peace."

PARIS, Sept. 1 (UPI).-Prançois Mauriac, whom former President Charles de Gaulle once called "the greatest French writer," died today at the age of 84.

The 1952 Nobel literary prize-winner had been in the Pasteur

He received the last rites of the Roman Catholic Church over the weekend. Before falling ioto a coma yesterday, he received the apostolic blessing of Pope Paul VI through Jean-Marie Cardinal Villet.

Mauriae had never fully recovered from a broken shoulder he suffered in April, 1969, while going to vote for his close friend, Geo. de Gaulle in a refereodum the geoeral lost. Mauriac's body was placed in his study today and friends and admirers came to pay their last respects. The French leaders and fellow writers.

Pope Paul said that he was "a figure of the first rank in contemporary literature of Christian inspiration," The comment was made in a telegram of condolence sent on the pontiff's behalf hy the Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Villot.

Gen, de Gaulle sent a message of sympathy to Mauriac's wife and family. The general had kept regularly informed of the author's condition. Prime Minister Jacques Chaban-Delmas: "He acclaimed Gen.

de Gaulle as the providential man whom France needed to survive the war. His pronouncements nn men and events were rarely belied by the facts. His faith in God did the rest."

François Cardinal Marty, Archbishop of Paris: "As one of that astonishing generation of Freoch Catholics who knew how to describe the greatness of man, dominated to the point of anguish by the shadows within himself but saved from the weight of sin by the love of a hidden God."

One major source of human cadmium consumption has been traced to soft water that floxs through and erodes zinc pipes that have a high codmium content. This water is usually highly acid, because it absorbs carbon dioxide and forms car-

François Mauriac (1885-1970)

By Alden Whitman As a novelist François Mauday in his home in Paris. sought to probe the darkest crevesses of the human psyche His searching tales of French middle-class life and of conflicts between the demands of sexuality and those of morality won him admission to the French Academy at the comparatively early age of 48.

These Dostoevskian narratives also gained him the international renown of a Nobel Prize

A writer of singular resource fulness and self-criticism, he ceased to write novels when his imaginative powers flagged (there was, though, one final novel, a good one, published in years), and turned journalist and polemicist. For the last 30 years of his life he was a trenchant critic at large, fash ioning weekly articles for the French press on politics, literature and life.

Wittily and often maliciously, he editorialized about whatever and whomever displeased him. Among his more constant targets for many years were; those he thought lacking in sufficient understanding of his friend Charles de Gaulle.

In a country where the views of men of letters are taken Maurisc's "Bloc-Notes," as he called his opinion columns, had an enormous readership. Indeed, he was better known for these in his late years than he was for his

The columns, written in im-peccable style, often created shockwaves, Although Mauriac was in general a conservative, he made common cause with those who protested French tortures in Algeria; the death sentences of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, executed in the United States as Soviet spies; the American war in Vietnam; and a long list of similar acts.

Dismays Co-Religionists It was a measure of his talent and his integrity that he retained the respect of his adversaries however much be may have dismayed them. Among those often dismayed were his co-religionists. A stanch Roman Catholic, he nonetheless followed an independent secular line. He was, for example, an eloquent opponent of Francisco Franco: a hero to many Catholics. His novels, too, brought slight comfort to conservatives in the church, and some even smelled heresy in them. Mauriac produced 23 novels.

the bulk of them between 1921 and 1941. "Every one." according to Prof. Henri Peyre of Yale, "is a fresh attempt and an adventure into the unknown." They all dealt with some aspect of the problem of evil. "I was and am worried by the problem of evil and the problem of grace," Maurisc told this reporter, who visited him at his country estate near

"We live in a polluted world now. It is time for me to go. The future is very, very black because these times sin against

Speaking in his characteristically husky voice (the result cords), Mauriac disputed the notion that he was a Catholic novelist. "I am a novelist who is a Catholic," he insisted. With the aid of a certain gift. tried to make the Catholic universe of evil palpable, tan-gible, odorous. If theologians provided an abstract idea of the sinner, I gave him flesh and blood."

Maurisc wrote of such matters as the disintegration of an arranged marriage; of a son distorted by his mother's destructive love; of a bored and suffering wife who tried unsuccessfully to poison her husband; of a father and son who shared a hist for the same classic stylistic limpidity; had the capacity for making the dark motives and histful passions of his characters exceedingly real, which prompted his friend André Gide to suggest that his novels connived at the sins they appeared to denounce. But Mauriac, under his patina of galety, was an intensely serious and devout man. This was to a large degree the result of his unusual upbringing: He was born at Bordeaux on Oct. 11, 1885, the youngest of five children of a prosperous and landed middle-class family. One of his three brothers became a physician, one a lawyer and one a priest.

The elder Mauriac, an anticierical unbeliever, died when François was 18 months old and sionately pious mother: Admirer of Pascal

Liking solitude, he was a meditative youth whose favorite writer was Blaise Pascal, the religious philosopher who pictured human nature in dour terms. After completing his secondary studies at Bordeaux, the young Mauriec went to Paris paleography and medieval archesology. But carrying within him ardent memories of Bordeaux and of the human desires, conflicts and temptations that he had observed, he left school to become a writer. One of his earliest essays, a Fleurs du Mel" against Catholic defense of Baudelaire's critics, prefigured Mauriac's later individualism in secular matters. Yet, he once said, he belonged to "the race of those who, born into Catholicism, realize on the verge of manhood that they can never break away from it, that they are not free to leave or come back

Most critics agree that Mauriec's first masterpiece was "Le Baiser an Lepreux" ("A Kiss for the Leper"). Published in 1922 the novel dealt with the arranged marriage of a hideously ugly but wealthy man to a husky peasant girl. Told with pity and satire, the spare nar-rative projected its author into the front ranks of French writers.

"In that brief, inhumanly hard movel, all the greatness of Mauriac's art is already fully. developed." Prof. Peyre said.

More Masterpieces

In the next 10 years Mauriac produced four other masterpieces, each adding to his fame. He composed them, as he did all his works, first in longhand, then dictating this draft to a secretary and finally revising the typed copy. He divided his time between Paris and Maksgar, his family estate overlooking the outside Bordeaux, where he could write in contemplation and among the people he knew best. His other novels were "Geni-

trix" (1923), which told of a maternal love driven to tyrannical s; 'Le Désert de l'Amour' ("The Desert of Love,") published in 1925, which recounted son, each pligrims in the wasteland of love, for a woman of a certain reputation; Desqueyroux (1927), whose herseeks unsuccessfully to poison her husband; and "Le Nœud de Vipères" ("Viper's Tangle") issued in 1932, in which the theme of pession for money is elaborated. "Viper's

They love vacant seats and all the excitement that goes with elections." Mauriac was on good personal terms with the leading intellectuals of his age, including Gide and Jean-Paul Sartre, with neither of whose philoso-phies he agreed. Yet when Gide died. Maurisc wrote:

"I don't know whether Gide is in heaven or hell. But wherever he is, it must be very in-As for Sartre, We got along like a cat and a dog, but he is a very fine man, nonetheless." It was Sartre who, in the opinion of many critics, point-ed out the chief weakness of Mauriac's novels: the lack of freedom of his characters. This element of predetermination led Sartre to say: "God is no artist. Neither is Mauriac."

'And Sartre went on: "What he says about his characters is like Holy Writ. He explains them, he classifies them, he condemns them against any appeal. He has the point of view of God Himself." By the time the Nobel Prize was awarded him in 1953 specifically for his novels, he on public affairs. His hero was De Ganlie ("As soon as I knew him I was with him") and his theme was the importance of a Prench national identity. Toward the close of his life with about 100 books to his credit, Mauriac sometimes wondered if he had lived too long. Sitting in his living room at Malagar he confided to a "I was brought up and lived

Fair Trial

When Ronnie McLucas was found guilty of conspiracy to murder, his attorney commented: "I believe they gave a black revolutionary a fair trial." This will doubtless ha disputed by the Black Panthers and their white allies, but it seems amply justifled by the facts. It is also an implied but quite pointed rebuke to those who, in the turmoil that preceded the opening of the case, doubted whether such a fair trial was possible for a black revolutionary anywhere in the United States.

Indeed, quite apart from the conduct of the trial itself, the atmosphere surrounding it was not vindictive, despite gruesome testimony to the torture and murder of Laex Rackley, himself a Black Panther. Whatever extra-judicial manifestations there were came from those whe exchanged aries of "Pewer to the people" with the defendant in the courtroom, and paraded outside with placards denouncing the trial as a "racist frame-no."

There are other trials to follow this in the Rackley case, trials whose implications are more eerious in that the prosecution will seek to involve leaders of the Black Panther movement in the conspiracy. Tensions may well mount again. But the simplistic cry of "Free the Black Panthers" which enlisted so much emotional sympathy among white radicals has been demonstrated to be a slegan that is valid only in a truly revolutionary context.

That is to say, murder has been done, and there is at least a prima facle case that it was committed as an act of political discipline, wholly outside the law. The state, and the society it represents, has an obligatien to determine who was responsible for that act. To demand anything else is to call upon society to abdicate its responsibility.

The McLucas trial ehowed that society could discharge its obligation with fairness and discrimination: McLucas, after prolonged and earnest deliberation by the jury, was acquitted of three of the charges against him. There is no reason to assume that succeeding trials in the case will be conducted less responsibly; unhappily, there is also ne reason to hope that the supporters of the accused will be any more responsible.

In the United States, the expression of revolutionary opinions is free. The commission of revolutionary acts is subject to lawful restraint and, if necessary, puniebment. Both of the conditions have to be maintained in a free society—or it will no longer be free. Laex Rackley found that ont, painfully and fatally. It would be well if all Americans who respond facilely to such slogans as "Power to the people" should ask themselves: 'What people? How many of them? Power to do what-and how?"

In recent decades vice-presidential travel abroad has often been the diplomatic equivalent of "showing the flag." It has cerved to reassert American interest in a threatened area or to reassure client states at a nervous moment. But sometimes its purposes have been much more political tban diplomatic.

Spiro Agnew's six-day caravan through Asia to re-explain the Nixon doctrine conformed to this pattern. It may have done more to confuse than to clarify American intentions in the Far East, but it did launch the Vice-President on this fall's electioneering in a cloud of headlines, all designed to lend a patina of anthenticity to the evidences of administration "success" Mr. Agnew went to Asia to find.

In Seoul, hours of "hard bargaining" between the Vice-President and President Park of South Korea failed to produce a communiqué on the linkage between Ameriean funds for modernization of the Korean Army and the withdrawal of American troops. Mr. Agnew's own statement that plans to withdraw 20,000 troops this year represented only a first step toward withdrawal of all 64,000 American troops in. perhaps, five years brought a White House disclaimer. "At this time there are no plans or intentions to draw down additional forces," said a presidential spokesman. Only a few days before the Agnew trip began, a high White House official said a' careful stody had convinced the administration that a modernized South Korean Army, backed up by the United States forces left after the planned withdrawal of 20,000 men. would be capable of repelling any threat short of a full-scale joint assault by North Kores and Communist China. The American message to South Korea, as defined by this White House official, was that removing the 20,000 Americans now would make it easier to induce Congress to keep the remaining he would meet Wednesday with the American troops in Korea. All that was left Saigon delegation to the peace talks, and would remain in Paris of that message after the Agnew visit was

The smoke was just as thick over Cambodia as the Vice-President explained and re-explained what administration policy was in that battleground. His initial statement that it would be "Impossible" to withdraw all American combat forces from Vietnam if the Lon Nol government fell to the Communists underwent dilution after dilution. tempting to promote a neutralist. In the end. Mr. Agnew explained that what regime in Saigon. he meant all along was the timetables for Vietnam withdrawal "might not be as ambitious" as the administration would like if the Communists prevailed in Cambodia.

Now that the Vice-President is on his way home, the White House professes pleas- between U.S. and North Vietnamese ure at his performance abroad. That gratification may be based on something more than is currently in the record. Otherwise, the diplomatic dividends seem decidedly marginal, as against those connected with Mr. Agnew's stumping for Republican candidatea this fall.

International Opinion

Soviet-American Cooperation

... The Middle East is only the most urgent example of a principle which has a worldwide significance: That a stable international order requires as its basis an understanding between the two super-powers. The balance of power between them has partially stabilized their own direct relationship but it is not enough. They must move toward active cooperation to prevent or limit all wars if the dangers of an accidental nuclear conflict are to be avoided ...

-From the Observer (Landan).

Mr. Brezhnev, the Soviet party leader, brings words of moderation to bear on the Middle East situation.

It is reassuring that he describes the cease-fire plan as a chance of approaching a settlement "from a position of realism and responsibility." He aids the forces of peace in this.

Similarly, Mr. Richard Nixon, the U.S. President, is entitled to world thanks for the patient part he has played in working to defuse the most explosive problem of our

That America and Russia, deliberately shedding the histrionics of propaganda, have succeeded in bringing tha Israelis and the Arabs to the conference chamber is a triumph for the traditional techniques of secret diplomacy.

Unfettered Fedayeen

All the signs are that Hussein and Nasser have decided to initiate a campaign of limitation using political policing and occasionally military methods rather than to go all-out to annihilate the guerrillas. After all, there is no hurry about disarming the fedayeen, for the peace talks in Naw York are only just beginning and for the time being they look more like failing than being a quick success.

Not until there are definite signs of results will there be any urgency about curbing the guerrillas' activities. Until then, the two heads of state will probably aim more at damping down polemics against peaceful solution as far as possible and seeking allies among moderate Palestinians by promising them representation at the talks. -From the Neue Zuercher Zeitung (Zurich).

Russia and West Germany

Russia, to achieve an unprecedented arms and space expenditure and to finance foreign interventions, has not only kept her people short of food but has starved her economy of technology, experts and capital.

Having got a grossly one-sided political treaty out of Mr. Brandt, she is now giving him the privilege of making good the defects in her economy due to militarism, imperialism and the repressive and inefficient Communist system. This is raisdirected development aid with a vengeance.

PARIS. How to arrange the poappears to be emerging as the key issue in the new phase of the Paris peace talks. Involving tog-flight American and North Vietnamese negotiators as well as increasing diplomatic activity on the fringes of the deadlocked peace conference.

David Bruce, the new chief U.S. negotiator, arrived here four weeks ago, while Hanoi's Minister of sgo, while Hand's Minister of State Knan Thuy returned last Wednesday. They will hold their first publicly acknowledged meeting Thursday at the $2d formal conference session. Both sides firmly decline all comment on secret talks.

Furthermore, a key South Viet-namesa political figure unexpect-edly arrived in Paris Tuesday morning, charged with what he described as "a special mission of military interest." He is former general Tran Van Don, retiring chairman of the South Vietnamese Senate Defense Committee and a close associate of Gen. Duong Van "Big" Minh, who has often figured in speculation over a possible "peace government" in Saigon, Sen. Don said on arrival that "some time" before going via London to the opening of the UN General Assembly in New York, and then to Washington.

This change in emphasis is large-ly a result of the Nixon administration's "Vietnamization" program. under which U.S. troops are bring gradually withdrawn without thus far-any known quid pro quo from Hanol or dramatic change on the battlefields.

The North Vielnamese have al-wars insisted that a "correct" political solution in South Vietnam was the precondition for any serious bargaining over the details of mutual troop withdrawals. In effect. Hanoi is asking the United States to change the government, in Saigon. Publicly, the demand is for a new "peace cabinet" dedicated to "peace, independence and neutrality," a cabinet which would then negotiate formation of a provisional coalition government with the South Vietnamese Communist National Liberation Front. The United States for its part has often publicly declared that it would not "impose" a change of government in Saigon, and that any change there should be determined by the various South Vietnamese themselves-including President Thieue representatives, the bly neutralist-inclined, groups. The deadlock of the Paris conference was largely a result of the irreconcilability of these two public

NLF and perhaps other, presuma-

Pripate Posture

The private positions of both the States and Hanol, during secret talks in early 1969, were somewhat more flexible than their public statements. What Ambas-sador Bruce and Minister Xuan Thuy will be exploring, therefore, is whether in the changed couditions of autumn 1970 the gap may somehow be bridged, and compromise formulas evolved which might be acceptable to both Saigon and the NLF. South Vietnamese neutralists,

French diplomats and others have suggested that a "broadening" of the Saigon government, even if Gen. Thisu remains president, might astisfy Hanol's demand for a "peace cabinet." Others have suggested that the vehicle for a political compromise might be the South Vietnamese presidential election scheduled for the fall of 1971, in which a neutralist regime might emerge. During tha 19 months of the Parls peace conference, there have also been numerous soggestions of "mixed commissions" to supervise elections in South Vietnam-commissions which might or might not acquire some measure of de facto governmental authority. Hanoi's fermal reaction to these and other compromise proposals has yet to become clear, although Mane. Nguyen Thi Binh, foreign minister of the NLFs "provisional tent," indicated here seriles States cooperate in bilaterally pre-determining the shape of a new South Victuamese government. On the other hand, Ambassador Bruce, on the basis of his long experience as a US. Provy in London, Paris, Bonn and elegathers is believed to Bonn and elsewhere, is believed to feel that U.S. intervention in the domestic politics of other countries has usually been counterproductive—with all parties ultimately resenting U.S. interference, and sading in any case by resolving their problems among themselves. Finera-fore, conference observers believe that Enan Thuy will be told that, while the bilsteral talks with Bruce can explore the possibilities for a compromise political solution, sig-nificant desisions can only ulti-discussions among the contending Vietnamese parties. Thus far, there has been no clear evidence of Compannist willinguess to negotiate springly with Saigen's representatives—either directly, or by transforming the weekly formal four-sided conference into a serious negotisting forum, rather than a propaganda arena. Nevertheless, the Vietnamesa adversaries hava maintained informat contacts at through such intermediaries as French diplomats and neutralist rigures among the large Vietnamese community in Paris.

Moscow's New Mood

By Bernard Gwertzman

MOSCOW (NYT)_After two years of caution mixed with hostility. Soviet leaders have altered their foreign-policy emphasis and are again stressing the advantages of peaceful coexistence with the capitalist world.

At the same time Moscow appears to be adopting a sefter attitude toward Communist China, or at least one involving less invective. Those tactical moves in foreign policy have had a cumulative effect on the mood in the Soviet capital in recent weeks. Officials are somewhat more relaxed among foreigners, and diplomats argue among themselves over the motives behind the "atmospherica"

The Bussians, in essence, have hegun another "peace offensive" that may see a visit to the United Nations in October by Premier Alexei N. Kosygin.

In New York, Mr. Kosygin would undenbiedly make a major speech on the Soviet Union's desire for world peace, for a detente in Europe and Asia, and for a set-tlement in the Middle East. He would probably hold a series of well-publicized meetings with President Mixon and other government heads assembled for the 25th anniversary of the United Nations

Part of the reason for the changed mood, and for the rather innections articles in the Soviet press bout the West and about China these days, can be explained by what the Soviet leaders call "the realistes." Things are going very well for Moscow in foreign-policy matters that is the reality.

The West Germans, in a treaty signed here Aug. 12, gave the Russians what they wanted politically from the leading Western power on the Continent-recognition of the status quo in Europe, and implicit, if not legal, recognition of East Germany's sovereignty.

Help From Bonn

Bonn may also provide some ngeded economic help, particularly if Daimler-Benz succeeds in establishing a consortium to build the world's largest truck factory here. The Chinese, who were clearly yearying the Soviet leaders last year, have refreshed from pape vocative border actions for more than a year. Ozechoslovskia has been "ngr:

malized" and problems with Romania have been smoothed over. As-Europe, Mossow can be somewhat induigent and endorse more direct ties between East and West.

Most important, the Russians now seem confident about the arment that will meet the minimum demand of the Arabs: complete Israeli withdrawal from all terri-tory occupied in the 1967 war.

Aside from these "realities," it seems clear that Moscow finds the conciliatory posture much more enitriachy posture inuter more profitshe than a hostile posture. Soviet strategic goals samet between the force; in fact, tematon achieved by force; in fact, tematon achieves to force interests.

Consistent Policy

The policy, in the opinion of mained strikingly consistent. It includes bringing subtle pressure on the countries of Western Europe to give the Soviet Union a greater role in European affairs. It in-cludes a Middle Eastern situation in which the Russians remain as the principal backer and chief foreign influence in the Arab world. A settlement with China and the eventual disengagement of the U.S. from Southeast Asia are also

Soviet policy toward the U.S. is beset by certain contradiction Because it is the mab. source of technological knowledge and the only country that can seriously threaten the security of the Soviet Union, relations with Washington are likely to remain businessifike and, at times, even cordial.

But the United States has also been the chief barrier to Soviet dominance in the world. Crucial to the Kremlin is the fact that the United States is the chief expenent of the anti-Communist ideology.

The policy of perty shief Leo-nid I Brezhnev and his colleagues has clearly been aimed at encouraging forces that would diminish American influence in the world arens and weuld pertra; Washing, ton as the war capital and Moscow

Russia's Base In the East

By Stanley Karnow

ALMA ATA-Set against a land A scape of towering snow capped peaks, this handsome city is a good place to observe one of the most sensitive sectors of Central Asia the frontier area between Soviet Karakhatan and China's Single Frontier.

For this area, once on the anglest trade pouts thet haved China with the Near Fact and Europe, has been of abmost strategic dentificance to the Buchans in their dispute with Petring. And, barring an unlikely settlement of that dispute it is bound to be arrest for years to come.

It has long served the Russians as a base in their repeated attempts throughout history to dominate the Central Asian heartland, a mission that Moscow's sulers from Crarist days have considered their manalest desiry.

It adjoins a region of China peopled by Uighurs, Karakhs and other Meslem minerities who have frequently shows themselves receptive to Seviet biandishments in their efforts to resist Chinase cultural assimilation.

It is within reach of the Chinese nuclear and missile testing grounds at Lop Nor, an irresistible target for a preemptive strike should their

for a preemptive strike should their quarrel with Peking tempt the Russians to take real action.

It flanks a remote part of China that, because of poor communications, Beking would find enormously difficult to man and supply in the event of a shooting war with the Soviet Union.

The Clashes

From April through August of last year, the Russians appear to have taken the initiative in staging a series of clashes with the Chinese at several key points along the Sinkiang bearder.

The purpose of these clashes was evidently to retaliate for incidents started by the Chinese at the far started by the Chinese at the far eastern end of the Sino-Soviet trouter and at the same time, to dramatize to Belting that Sindlang is extramely volumerable to Russian attack.

Though the actual fighting has abated since then, the Kremlin has gone ahead with the creation here in Alma Ata of headquarters for a new "Central Atan Mulitary District" under Gen. Nikolai Lyash-

trict" under Gen. Nikolai Lyasa.

The obvious function of this new regional establishment is to control the growing number of troops that have been proved into Kazakhstan, Kirghida and Tadzhikstan, the three Soviet republics bordering on Sinking.

According to Western estimates Moscow has roughly 300,000 regular troops deployed to an arc around Sindang. Chinese strength on the other side consists of four divisions about 50,000 men-in addition to special frontier and militia units of doubtful ability.

Chinese Strategy Should war erupt in this vicinity, Chinese strategy would presumably be to retreat before the Soviet forces and harass them with guar. rille tactics in the huge, ruggest Sinkiang wasteland.

The Russians, fully aware that such a struggle would be long and costly, are apparently trying instead to subvert Peting's authority in Sinkleng by encouraging the ima million Uighurs and two million Espains in the area to oppose their Chinese overlords.

Back in 1962, when the schism between Moscow and Peking was beginning to widen, Russian agents then operating in Staktang Incited 60,000 Moslems to flee into the Sowiet Union. Chinese efferts to hait that exedus led to open revolu in some Sinklang cities.

Since then, employing those refugees as propagandists, two radio stations located here have been beaming broadcasts to Sinkians designed to stir up Moslem hatred for the Chinese

These broadcasts stress the thems that Peking is seeking to obliterate Moslem customs and religion. This is somewhat ironic, since Soviet pressure has virtually eliminated Islamic observance here in Aima Ata, formerly an important Mosler

It is probable, too, that Soviet Army elements close to the border are aiding Uighur Kazakh and other Moslem guerrilla bands trat are skirmishing against the Cal-nese inside Sinking. These bands which wander through the mountains, broadcast intermittently from a mobile radio station that calls itself "The Voice of the Partisans."

Though unwilling to disclose the extent of Soviet assistance to these guerrilles, an official here said: It is only natural that those inside China who are suffering should look to their friends for help."

As in the Par Eastern reaches of their common berder, then the Russians and Chiaese here are locked in a situation that is neither war nor peace but remains never-theless potentially explosive

It was denounced and confiscated just the same."

Until recently, there was the problem of what to do with the offending material. "It used to be rather funny," said Mrs. Tattoli. Since, according to law, they could not dispose of the offending evidence until time came for trial (many, many months shead), they had to look for warehouses to store the magazines. Paris Theater Season Off to Head Start

By Thomas Quino Curtiss DARIS, Sept. L-The curtain is about to rise on the new theater season in Park, which is off to a relatively early start. September is usually a warm-up period with the successes of the previous semester reopening to test anew their box office magic. But this year there will be many new plays, a fair share of them by eminent native authors. Among the established Gallie dramatists who will represented by new works are Marcel Achard, Jean Anouilh, Eugène Ionesco. Andre Roussin, François Billetdoux. Francoise Sagan, Francoise Dorin, Marc-Gilbert Sauvajon, Robert Thomas, Romain Weingarten, Francis Veber and

Marcel Achard's latest is Eva ou L'Amour Est un Casse-Gneule." "David Bruce has given me the best English translation of the title," reports the Academician Achard, "Eva or Love Is Murder." As might be anspected, the play deals fronically with love. It contains no murder—only a near murder. It will replace the adaptation of the English farce "There's a Girl in My Soup" at the Theatre de

The 1970-71 season begins officially on Sept. 8, with the première at the Théaire Edonard VII of Robert Thomas's detective play, "Double-Jeu." Francis Veber's comedy, "Le Contrat," with Raymond Gérome and Jean Le Poulain will open at the Theatre Gymnas-Marie Bell the following evening and Marc-Gilbert Sauvajon's "Une Polgnée d'Orties" (A Handful of Nettles) will arrive at the Michodière, Sept. 10. Anomilh

Jean Anopilh has two plays on the Parisian boards at the moment, both holdovers from last season, "Cher Antoine" at the Comédie des Champs-Flysées and "Les Poissons Ronges" at the Theatre de l'Œuvre. Both are concerned with the private life of a play-His new play-"Le Théâtre ou La Vie Comme Elle Est"-will have an actormanager as central figure. As a young man. Anough served Jouvet's play reader. The Theatre de la Ville will also revive Giraudoux's "La Guerre de Troie n'Aura Pas Lieu." And at the Comédie-Française, Robert Hirsch will play in a new production of Molière's "Georges Dandin" —in which the much employed word, still ever certain of a laugh, "cocu" was introduced to the French stage. The production will be directed by Jean-Paul Roussillon.

From Abroad

French dramatists are dominating the Parisian theater

In addition to the festival events proper, there are also happenings on what is known as the Festival Fringe. There are innumerable plays, operas and concerts given in church halls, lofts, basements and attics during the festival. One estimate is that this year there are more than, 1,000 amateur actors showing off on the fringe. One Edinburgh company, certainly not amateur but equally certainly on the fringe, is the

Traverse Theater Club, Edinburgh's own theater. This is one of the most interesting and be several important modern plays from abroad.

Michel Vitold is reviving Chekhov's "Ivanoff" at the Chekhov's "Ivanoff" at the Athènee, "Hadrian VII," the London success based on Baron Corvo's fantastic novel about a Chelsea scribbler who is elected pope, will be staged hy Raymond Rouleau at the Théatre de Paris with Claude Rich as the miraculously elevated author. Eric Kahn has adapted Edward Bond's historic nightmare, "Early Mornings," to which Queen Victoria is shown as possessing sapphic tendencies and Edward VII as a cannibal for performance at the Theatre National Populaire.

Jesn Danet's Les Trêteaux de France will play-probably indoors at the Theatre de Lu-tèce—Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman" with Claude Dauphin as the weary com-mercial traveler. This troupe tours the country, setting up tents for performances in the circus fashion. It will take the Miller drama on tour before coming to Paris in November.

"Pourquoi m'Avez-Vous Poses sur le Palier"-from the English play by Peter Scott-will soon tenant the Theatre Saint-Leonard Gershe's Georges. "Butterflies Are Free," Robert. Anderson'a "You Know I Can't Hear You When the Water's Running" and the London mystery thriller "Sleuth" are scheduled for Parisian presen-tation later in the season. The American musical "Sweet Charity," in French translation, will be at the Galte-Lyrique.

The Character of Edinburgh By Clive Barnes The music, by Andre Asriel, is in a minor-Weill mode but remains one of the attractions of the piece.

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Sept. center. Edinburgh has over the years learned how to make the least of its cisadvantage. It has no opera house and the acoustics of its main concert ball are blurred. It lacks theaters and hotels-a new motel sponsored by an oil company on the outskirts of the town is the first new hotel to be built in Edinburgh since the war. And looking around the town you will wonder whether your informant meant World War II, World War I or the Boer

Only a John Knox could approve of the Calvinist rigors of an Edinburgh Sunday, and while the licensing laws tend to make eating and drinking into a party game, good restaurants in Edinburgh are as rare as tuneful bagpipes. The principal hotel and restaurant guide to the British Isles finds no threestar restaurant in Edinburgh, no two-star restaurant and one very solitary and rather crowded, one-star restaurant. A gourmet's paradise Edinburgh is not. And the weather can most generously be characterized as uncertain.

Why then does the Edinburgh Festival remain successful and one of the two or three most rewarding of all European festivals? Partly, I suppose due to the smoky, granite grandeur of Edinburgh itself. It is a city of enormous character. There is also the warmth of the Edinburgh people to be considered. And finally there is the quality and diversity of the festival it-

One of the principal dramatic visitors to this festival has been the National Theater of the German Democratic Republic from East Berlin in their version of Aristophanes's "Peace." It is a play that—perhaps for sadly obvious reasons—is receiving a great deal of attention these days, and only recently it provided in New York the basis for an off-Broadway musical.

Strong Troupe

The German company is obviously a strong and welltrained troupe, although on this evidence perhaps less imprestive than its principal East German rival, the Berliner Ensemble. The troupe in Edinburgh, known as the Deutsches Theater, is the older of the two. It was founded in 1883 and had its great period of glory during the first three decades or so of this century, when it was under the direction of Max Reinhardt.

The trouble with "Peace" is the play itself. In a sense it may well be the most "contemof plays by Aristophanes but this does not make it the best. It is a cumbersome allegory, laced with a whole garbage pail of scatological humor and satirical references to gods who have passed out of even the credence of uperstition and therefore are beyond the reach of satire.

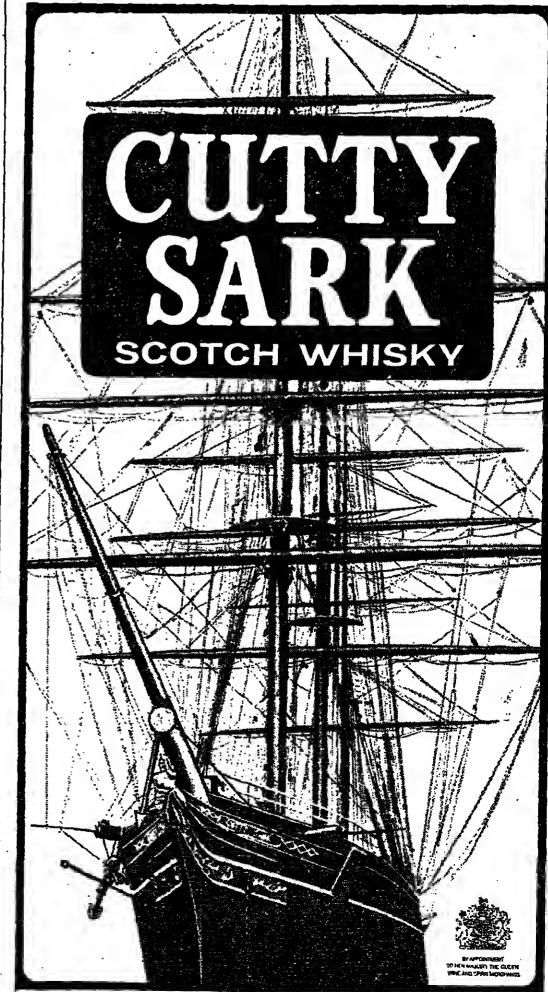

The staging by Benno Besson is jolly and enthusiastic. Fred Duren as the fly-blown humanist hero, Trylogaios, who brings Peace from Olympus is amusing and resourceful and the rest of the large cast cavort with style and vigor.

edition of Tartini's sonatas, played half a dozen of them Saturday evening in the music room of the Palaszo Chigi Saracini. Two were sonates for solo violin; for the others Guglielmo was joined by the able, tactful cellist Antonio Pocaterra. There was, indeed, Virtuosity and to spare, but there was also a great deal of meditative cantabile music of extreme simplicity, aknost starkness, trastantly inventive and often unexpectedly moving. Guglielmo's

Playing was perfectly attuned to the spirit of the works, which obviously he knows profoundly. He completed his program with

Franco Guill, Rictardo Brengola, and Salvatore Accardo (the soluist's own first violinist, Piero Toso, also acted as soloist for one concerto). It was a remarkable exploit, marred here and there by the uncertain intonation of the ensemble, but also made memorable by the cool, elegant playing of Gulli and by the warm rich, masterful artistry of Accardo, a truly outstanding musician. The "Largo Andante" with which Accardo ended the evening received a sensational, well-deserved evation. Also present, for a lighthearted flute concerto in G major, was the irresistible Severino of Tartini, with a program dedicated to a selection of his con-

Gazzelloni, whose golden flute glistened like the music itself. The Accademia Chigiana sponsors not only the Settimana Senese, but also a well-known summer school of master classes; and this year the students have been made a part of the festival. A group from the opera course appeared in a staged version of Mussorgsky's opera "The Marriage," or rather in the first act of that opera, which was all Mussorgsky wrote. The young South American baritone Felix la Rosa showed a distinct comic-and musical talent in the principal role of Podkolessin, matched by the witty dash of tenor Maurislo Prusoni. The work itself is of considerable interest (this was its first staged performance in Italy), and the direction of Luciano Alberti underlined delity its merits, brought out also by the musical interpretation of Daniel Lipton, who conducted the two planes (Mussergsky never orchestrated the completed act).

North opened the diagramed hand with one diamond, to East's surprise, and South responded one spade. When North then jumped to three diamonds, South was in quandary. This general principle on misfit hands is to stop as quickly as possible, but from South's angle three diamonds was most unlikely to be the best contract for his side. South bid three spades and would have liked to play that Unfortunately for him, such a bid is forcing in standard methods when part-ner has made a strong rebid. North naturally raised spades. When South ruffed the fourth club, cashed the king and queen of spades and led the diamond king, East not unnaturally covered with the ace. This turned out to be an error when South ruffed and reached this position: NORTH

Reviewed by Thomas Lask

THESE three volumes represent the first appearance in English of two contemporary Brazilian writers of some reputation in their home country. Except that both fill out our knowledge of the poorer and less appetizing side of Brazilian life, they have—on the basis of these books-little in common, Jose Veiga is a writer of wider range, greater complexity and with a larger reach. He is dark in coloring and more somber in mood. Even his playfulness has a grotesque and macabre side. Vasconcelos is relaxed, expansive, emotional. He plays on the heartstrings and is not afraid to push sentiment to the edge sentimentality. Although there are children in Veiga's stories, none lives the carefree life of the urchin in "My Sweet Orange Tree." Veiga is never quite light-earted. "Holiday Sunday." hearted. stark and stripped, is a powerful disquisition on the treatment of the Indians by their so-called superiors. "Courting Couple" is a satirical spoof of small-town marriage practice. The stolid duo is careful of all the proprieties and needs except those of their own senses. The title story mocks the bureancracy of a hamlet that acquires a machine that no one has ordered. no one can run, and no one knows what it is for. Nevertheless, the machine brings the town great prestige. Its presence turns out to be greater justification than its function.

His stories are not so simple as the summaries indicate. There is always something above and beyond the facts of the story. Call it allegory, if you will, or symbol or social commentary. But something more is always being meant than is being said. This trait is seen best in "The Three Trials of Manirema.

One day, the citizens of Manirema, a nondescript country town, notice a pack train of men and horses settling down not far from them across the stream. The townsfolk, hungry for news and novelty, look forward to meeting the strangers. But nothing happens. The others, sloof and unfriendly, wall themselves in and go about their mysterious work. Contact is finally made. One man is hired to haul sand; a loudmouthed shopkeeper forces his way into their compound for a visit. Both regret their action. They re-appear frightened and broken in spirit and soon an undefinable dread hangs over the town. Only one man, the smith, outfaces the strangers and, to everyone's astonishment is left alone During this time the town suffers two visitations. In the first, a huge pack of dogs inundates the place, destroy and dirtying everything it is reach. In the second, a grant herd of oxen pushes its v. into the village, occupevery inch of space and alm crushing the buildings in way. But when the oxen les it is found that the strang

NEW YORK, Sept. 1 (NYT). -Women's liberation, which has put Pat Palinkas into football and jockeys on thoroughbred horses, has made an attack on boxing. Windna Green, the wife of

Charlie (Devil) Green, who fights Floyd Patterson Sept. 15 at Madison Square Garden, showed up at a boxing luncheon with Edith Edwards, a friend, and both applied for State Athletic Commission licenses to act as seconds in Green's corner.

They filed the necessary applications including photographs fingerprints and $5 fees and presented them for approval to commissioner Edwin B. The 23-year-old Mrs. Green, who married Charlie 13 months ago, had this answer for the application query desling with experience: "Assisted in the training of Charlie Green for the last three years. I feel I have all the necessary requirements to be-come a second for professional "What does a second do?" Mrs. Green was asked.

"They work a fighter's corner between rounds," she said. "They wash the mouthpieces, Dooley seemed to have been caught hy surprise hy the two women. We'll have a meeting on their applications when the commission meets Sept. 17," he said. "Hey, that's two days after the fight," someone said. "Oh, then we'll act on it this

August Doings

LONDON.—Can anyone remember what August useri to be like in America before the Thirty Years' War? Before the era of the Long Hot Summer? Before revolution became chie and race became all the rage? No? Perhaps this summary of the news that absorbed Britain during the Angust just ended may help revive memoriesof those pastoral days and remino us that life among the English-speaking peoples need not necessarily be waged constantly at the brink of despera-

At the start of the month the Prime Minister, Edward Heath, was photographed in his sailboat at Cowes. He had to share headlines with Missing Man, who, as usual, was Sought by Police at the behest of Female Companion. She, poor dear, had last seen him entering the sea for a swim and, after a long interval during which he failed to emerge, had notified police of his probable drowning. Then—the plot thickening, but not much-police discovered that he had rented a car in another part of England.
The mystery: Why was the gentleman's ham-handed effort to give Female Companion the slip regarded as news in Fleet Street? Answer: It was August, and at least it wasn't an animal story.

Animals were making headliues as easily as if they had been Student Leaders in the United States. A dog's paw was injured in a subway escalator. Maxie, an extremely tough cat from Aden, had terrified all the other cats in his neighborhood. as well as most of the dogs, and provoked an outraged citizenry to petition for his remoral.

In Cheshire, Ken Potts told a reporter that his German shepherd, Pring, had gained "complete power over me." including the power to make him -Potts-feel everything the dog feels. "When he fell off a wall. I started to get pains," Potts

On Aug. 12, the grouse season opened in Scotland. Prime Minister Heath was not there. He was sailing.

A bishop of the Anglican Church went to see "Oh! Calcutta!" at the request of a newspaper which wanted his opioion. He said it was horing.

Bus fares went up in London. Someone called for a mass refusal to pay the increase. Public response to this call to revolt was no response.

Peter Sellers was married, for the third time: and again David Frost had to deny rumors that ne was about to marry.

A young man was badly injured, as was his date, when a hag he had found under a theater seat and placed in his car without examination proved to he a bomb. Large headlines suggested, without evidence, that the Irish Republican Army was at work. The theater of the bomb was showing "Woods!ock." on which the Sinn Fein's politica! position, if any, is obscure.

Meanwhile, in faraway Scotland the Duke of Edinburgh gave a lift to a honeymooning couple hitchhiking in the rain. Prime Minister Heath, visible now only in the sports pages, was reported sailing.

The soccer season opened. A womau who was naked to the waist attempted to siroll past Buckingham Palace, hut was halted by a policeman, covered, and led to custody.

England's cricket team, having challenged an international all-star team called The Rest of the World was being beaten, as what nation should not he if it challenges the rest of the world?

A plan to revise the London Telephone Directory said that telephone subscribers might no longer be listed in alphabetical order. This was stopped in the nick of time after someone pointed out that it was asinine. Subsequently, the Prime Minister, Mr. Heath, was reported to be sailing.

On the Isle of Wight Tiny Tim led thousands of youngsters at a rock festival in a mass singing of "There'll Always Be an England.

Yes, Tiur Tim and thousands of pop-music fans, it looks as if there always will.

20,000 or so, parts of it squalid and parts of it lovely, it has the look of a place where nothing much has ever happened. Nothing much has happened, as a mat-ter of fact, anywhere on the island. Except that, a little less than 200 years ago. Admiral Horatio Nelson, in a truculent mood, led a British flotilla into its placid harbors and sailed away a short time later minus his right arm. And, a little less than 35 years ago, a troublesome Spanish general aent there as commandant hecause it was as far as possible from Madrid and still, legally, an integral part of Spain, used it as the jumping-off point for the civil war that made him master of Spain,

The general is, of course, atill in Madrid, but his presence seems to per-meate the island where he began the long and arduous journey to the capital. Near the main square of Orotava is the headquarters of the local army garrison. In front of it a sentry, armed with a rifle, stands day and night under a portal with the inscription, "Todos Por La Patria." Behind the sentry a visitor can glimpse an austerely beautiful, Moorishlooking courtyard. You can approach for a closer look, but the sentry makes it very clear that the army is not extending hospitality.

For a small town, Orotava seems to have a lot of uniformed men on duty, and even the local police look like soldiers. Several of them are rather elderly men and, on a day when the temperature is around 80, they are encased in tunics that button to the throat. The Sam Browne belts and the paunches enhance, in the case of the older men, an eerie resemblance to the elderly general they serve. They tend to dark glasses and, although they might pass an inspection, there is a slight schlampischness about them that nags at the memory until, faintly, a bell rings: George Grosz's brilliant drawings of Prussian officers in Berlin, circa 1925. Down the street from the garrison headquarters, a steep path that begins with a stretch of ancient cobblestones leads to a road called the Camino de la Luz. Orotava peters out and the road cuts through miles of banana plantation -the banana is the basis of the Canary Islands economy. There are no rivers on Tenerife, yet the sound of rushing water is everywhere. The water comes from apparently inexhaustible "galsprings deep inside the volcanic mountains. The water swirls down sixinch-wide concrete-conduits that parallel the road, and the interior of the banana plantations is laced with them; sluices carry the water to the individual trees. From almost every tree-actually it's a shrub, about eight feet high—hangs lts "stem" of 60 or 70 green bananas, usually propped with a stick, and at the end of bunch of bananas is the "flower" a strange, heart-shaped object, reddish purple, about the size of a human head.

The Camino de la Luz winds, full of hairpin-bends, through the plantations, in a mid-afternoon silence that is almost absolute. The sun is warm but not oppressive; there is always an ocean breeze and even without it the shade would be comfortable. Small, dusty, gray lizards, basking on the rough stone walls, skitter away with a papery rustle as a walker approaches. Atop a rise in the road, where it bends, a low, whitewashed house sits quietly, shuttered against the heat Except for the telephone wires overhead nothing in the picture strikes a note of modernity. If a cadaverously thin knight, slouched on a ramshackle horse, carrying a broken lance, and trailed hy a fat squire atop a donkey, came over the crest of the hill, it would seem, one imagines, the most natural thing in the world. Except that there are, of course, no windmills on Tenerife, and if there had been, it's pretty unlikely that any Canary Islander would have charged at them with a lance.

When you approach Orotava again, returning along the Camino de la Luz, the road is so steep that most people stop every few yards to catch their breath. There is a row of houses that also climbs the hill, and children playing outside pause to greet the foreign visitor. utilizing what is apparently (or is it?) their sole word of English. "Good-bye!" they shout merrily. "Good-byyye!"

PEOPLE:

Without further comment, the following letter, from James W. Jackson, of Geneva is reprinted. "My secretary, whose renulation is impeccable, told me this story today: "One of ber younger sister's closest friends lives with her mother in the apartment-office building where our office is located, the Moillebeau building. -Last weekend ber mother visited friends in a nearby Swiss village at the time of a local festival. As a carnival prize, she won a live oeacock. Roast peacock heing a European delicacy, she brought the bird back to her apartment, but found that she lacked the nerve to kill it by the usual means (I presume by neck-chopping or neck-wringing She solved her problem by mixing a large quantity of sleeping pills with water and coaxing the peacock to eat the mixture. The bird immediately collapsed after consuming enough sleeping pills to be more than lethal to a human. The mother then plucked the feathers from the bird and placed it in the refrigerator. "The next morning, she opened the fridge door and was greeted with a hearty 'cluckcluck!' (or whatever peacocks say: After recovering from the shock, she found a sweater and wrapped the peacock in it, placing the bird's legs through the sleeves.

'The peacock now, two days later, has the run of the apartment, wearing its sweater, clucking proudly and boasting its own feather bed."

Department of grievious errors terrioly, terribly cutesy has been exacted again, this time by Mrs. England. In attempting last week to express our feeling of Agnes Turner, of Salisbury, utter squareness vis-à-vis today's version of bailroom dancing, we had written that we went to a youth hangout called the Calypsotheoue "disguised as a poof to hide the sharp corners." What we meant, of course, was a "pouf," defined by Webster as "a plece of furniture like an ottoman usually circular with cushion seats on all sides." In Britain, it seems, a "poof," as Mrs. Turner graciously points out, is a whole nother thing, to which we can only reply: "We assure you, Madame, etc.
